

A letter to my greatest love.

I'd like to believe that one day, the sunshine will come peeking through the folds of the curtain and dance delicately on my eyes. They would then flutter open, only to be embraced by the warmth of yours. I'd then take a moment to look deeper into them, once again finding the comfort and security I always have. A blanket of calmness spreads over the thousand storms of the seas tumbling inside my chest. I would then rest my head on your arm, stretched across me, and feel my body tingle as you pull me closer. I drink in the extra minute of your existence. I want to hold on to every smile, every word, every feeling. You smile. I stay.

It's a beautiful place we're in. A place where only you and I exist. A place that's dotted by the stars in the sky, ever reminding us of the beautiful things we have created together. Everything else is just background noise. We belong here stronger than we've belonged to anywhere else. Because we've never really belonged anywhere else.

We'll walk through the nights we're supposed to be asleep, simply because we'd rather stay up with each other.

I love you because you've created love for me. I'm in love with the way you've made love so effortless. Your presence is everlasting and your love is overflowing.

I've never felt more at home with someone, mentally, physically, emotionally. This is the love I've been looking for, and I know it because it feels right. The same kind of right I feel when we embrace. The same kind of right I feel when we are lying down next to each other, hands intertwined.

I want a forever love with you.
